

A long-exposure photograph of a sunset over a rocky coastline. The sun is a bright orb on the right horizon, casting a shimmering path of light across the water. The sky is filled with soft, colorful clouds in shades of orange, pink, and blue. In the foreground, several dark, jagged rocks are partially submerged in the calm water. The overall mood is peaceful and contemplative.

When I Am Afraid Sally Michael, 2018-04-10 Children often have fears of things both real and imagined Things that go bump in the night big dogs being in a strange place and even climbing to the top of the monkey bars can produce anxiety in children Simply telling a child not to be afraid is most often ineffective So how are you guiding them to handle those fears Children need the confidence that there is someone bigger stronger and wiser than themselves who will protect and care for them But more than that they need the assurance that someone will be there for them to make everything right to handle the difficulties they can t to accomplish the tasks that are too hard for them and to navigate the situations that are beyond their experience and ability Often that bigger stronger wiser person is a parent grandparent or other adult But parents and other adults are not supreme all powerful and all knowing They fail children and find situations they can t navigate well Only One Person is sufficient to handle all the complexities of the universe and in particular the personal world of every child That Person is God Almighty the Creator and Ruler of all things When I Am Afraid encourages young children to look to God for courage and strength as it weaves together stories about every day fears
