The Civilized Imagination Daniel Cottom, 1985-06-30 The Civilized Imagination is a study of literature in a period of cultural change As part of the transition from the eighteenth to the nineteenth century a great transformation occurred in the relations among aesthetic theory literature and society This study analyses such changes as they appear in the works of Ann Radcliffe Jane Austen and Sir Walter Scott three apparently distinct novelists whom the author locates within a unified cultural movement Although the works of these writers are extremely different in many respects in Professor Cottom's view they are all preoccupied with the changing relation between aristocratic and middle class values In Ann Radcliffe's works middle class values are beginning to emerge within a governing aristocratic context in Jane Austen's novels these newer values are precariously balanced against the old in Sir Walter Scott's books they have become victorious at least superficially Professor Cottom examines the way these writers deal with such topics as taste landscape communications morality and women in order to show how certain aesthetic problems result from social change
