Background

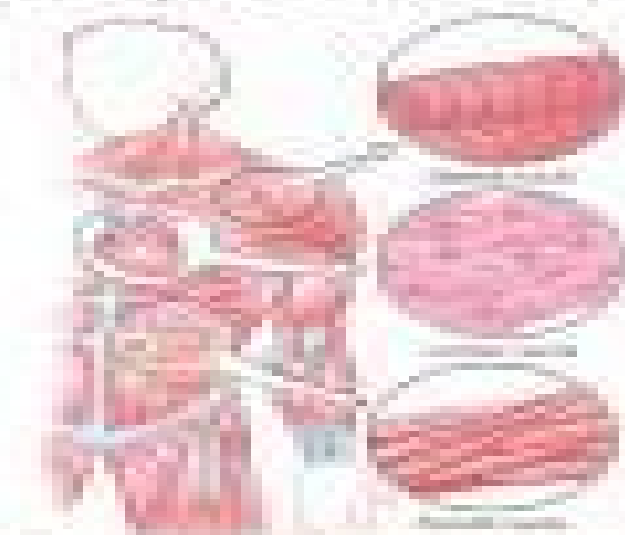

The Muscular System

The motor (muscle) system operates systems in movement - the voluntary (skeletal) system, including posturing, breathing, circulation, locomotion, digestion, excretion, and reproduction. It is the largest and most complex system in the body. It is composed of three types of muscle: skeletal, smooth, and cardiac. Skeletal muscle is voluntary, striated, and attached to bones. Smooth muscle is involuntary, non-striated, and found in the walls of internal organs. Cardiac muscle is involuntary, striated, and found in the heart. All three types of muscle are composed of muscle fibers, which are made up of myofibrils. Myofibrils are the basic units of contraction in muscle.

Skeletal Muscle

Skeletal muscle is the most abundant type of muscle in the body. It is composed of long, cylindrical fibers that are attached to bones. Skeletal muscle is voluntary, striated, and has a central nucleus. It is composed of three types of muscle fibers: slow-twitch, fast-twitch, and intermediate-twitch. Skeletal muscle is responsible for most of the body's movements, including walking, running, and jumping. It is also responsible for maintaining posture and balance.

Skeletal muscle fibers are composed of myofibrils, which are made up of actin and myosin filaments. Actin filaments are thin and myosin filaments are thick. They interact to produce contraction. Skeletal muscle fibers are also surrounded by a layer of connective tissue called the sarcolemma. This layer is composed of a cell membrane and a basement membrane. The sarcolemma is responsible for maintaining the fluid balance of the muscle fiber. It also contains the nucleus and other organelles. The sarcolemma is also responsible for transmitting electrical impulses that cause contraction.

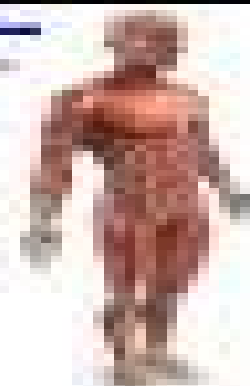

Cardiac Muscle

Cardiac muscle is found in the heart and is responsible for pumping blood. It is composed of branched, striated fibers that are connected by gap junctions. Cardiac muscle is involuntary, striated, and has a central nucleus. It is composed of two types of muscle fibers: slow-twitch and fast-twitch. Cardiac muscle is responsible for the heart's contraction and relaxation. It is also responsible for maintaining the heart's rhythm. Cardiac muscle fibers are surrounded by a layer of connective tissue called the endocardium. This layer is composed of a cell membrane and a basement membrane. The endocardium is responsible for maintaining the fluid balance of the muscle fiber. It also contains the nucleus and other organelles. The endocardium is also responsible for transmitting electrical impulses that cause contraction.

Smooth Muscle

Smooth muscle is found in the walls of internal organs and is responsible for moving substances through these organs. It is composed of spindle-shaped fibers that are arranged in layers. Smooth muscle is involuntary, non-striated, and has a central nucleus. It is composed of two types of muscle fibers: slow-twitch and fast-twitch. Smooth muscle is responsible for the contraction and relaxation of internal organs. It is also responsible for maintaining the tone of these organs. Smooth muscle fibers are surrounded by a layer of connective tissue called the adventitia. This layer is composed of a cell membrane and a basement membrane. The adventitia is responsible for maintaining the fluid balance of the muscle fiber. It also contains the nucleus and other organelles. The adventitia is also responsible for transmitting electrical impulses that cause contraction.
