global peacebuilding community How can technocratic approaches to peacebuilding that are rooted in short term project based execution of activities further the longer term transformative outcomes like altering young people s attitudes and beliefs about peace and violence In response to this global challenge in Peacebuilding Legacy Sukanya Podder analyzes the long term effects of peacebuilding programmes involving children and young people Podder unpacks the concept of peacebuilding legacy through the lens of time transformation and intergenerational peace Podder also develops unique qualitative cues for measuring legacy in terms of the institutional normative and organizational logics If norms resonate strongly with the local context they are likely to encourage strong retention and meaningful adoption over time Successful institutionalization of project models through planned handover to successor national organizations or government departments holds the key to stronger local ownership Organizational learning and reflection can support this process through a more strategic approach to programming and through post exit studies Regarding attitude change Podder found that the media and peace education projects that targeted individuals ingrained beliefs and values but overlooked the role of group social norms had only limited persuasive effects To shift the values practices norms and beliefs of the younger generation the mindset of the older generation must also be targeted Changes in the legal political economic and other social institutions are critical for long term and meaningful transformation This requires adopting an ecological model of peace

Thomas,2017-11-07 In 2003 just before the start of the US invasion of Iraq military planners predicted that the mission s success would depend on using diverse sources for their workforce While thousands of US troops were needed to secure victory in the field large numbers of civilian contractors many from poor countries in Africa and Asia were recruited to provide a range of services for the occupying forces In Contract Workers Risk and the War in Iraq Kevin Thomas provides a compelling account of the recruitment of Sierra Leonean workers and their reasons for embracing the risks of migration In recent years US military bases have outsourced contracts for services to private military corporations who recruit and capitalize on cheaper low skilled workers Thomas argues that for people from post conflict countries such as Sierra Leone where there are high levels of poverty and acute unemployment the opportunity to improve their situation outweighs the risk of migration to war torn Iraq Examining migrants experiences in their native country at US bases and after their return to Sierra Leone Thomas deftly explores the intricate dynamics of risk sets up a theoretical framework for future researchers and offers policy recommendations for decision makers and practitioners in the field Incorporating the voices of Sierra Leonean contractors who were manipulated and exploited Contract Workers Risk and the War in Iraq turns the spotlight on a subject that has remained on the periphery of history and reveals an unexpected consequence of the War on Terror Sierra Educational News ,1918 The Bulletin - The Journal of the Sierra Leone Geographical Association ,1971 An Index to Current Literature Sampson Low,1862 Publishers' circular and booksellers' record ,1860 Shaping the Sierra Timothy P.
