

Constructing the Permutation Table Code

After you've done all the work in the last section, you're left with the following code:

File Edit View

```
1 // Construct the permutation table for the given cipher
2 void ConstructPermutationTable(int cipher, int *table)
3 {
4     // Construct the permutation table for the given cipher
5     // The permutation table is an array of integers, where the value at index i
6     // represents the value of the cipher at index i. For example, if the cipher is 7     // 12345, then the permutation table would be 12345.
8     // The permutation table is used to encrypt and decrypt messages.
9     // To encrypt a message, you take the permutation table and the message and 10    // apply the permutation to the message. To decrypt a message, you take the 11    // permutation table and the message and apply the inverse permutation to the 12    // message.
```

Method 1 - Manual Permutation Table

Plaintext										Ciphertext
