considerable progress in expanding access to primary and secondary schooling with countries having achieved near universal enrollment of the primary school age cohort ages 6-11 except for Afghanistan and Pakistan. Secondary enrollment shows an upward trend as well. Beyond school, many more people have access to skilling opportunities and higher education today. Although governments have consistently pursued policies to expand access, a prominent feature of the region has been the role played by nonstate actors: private nonprofit and for-profit entities in expanding access at every level of education. Though learning levels remain low, countries in the region have shown a strong commitment to improving learning. All countries in South Asia have taken the first step, which is to assess learning outcomes regularly. Since 2010, there has been a rapid increase in the number of large-scale student learning assessments conducted in the region. But to use the findings of these assessments to improve schooling, countries must build their capacity to design assessments and analyze and use findings to inform policy.

Journal of the Senate of the State of Indiana. Indiana. General Assembly. Senate, 2016. Wealth, Power, and Authoritarian Institutions. Michaela Collord, 2024-07-12. Through an analysis of the recent political history of Tanzania and Uganda, Wealth, Power, and Authoritarian Institutions offers a novel explanation of why authoritarian parties and legislatures vary in strength and why this variation matters. Michaela Collord elaborates a view of authoritarian political institutions as both reflecting and magnifying elite power dynamics. While there are many sources of elite power, the book centres on material power. It outlines how diverse trajectories of state-led capitalist development engender differing patterns of wealth accumulation and elite contestation across regimes. These differences in turn influence institutional landscapes. Where accumulation is more closely controlled by state and party leaders, as was true in Tanzania until economic liberalization in the 1980s, rival factions remain subdued. Ruling parties can then consolidate relatively strong institutional structures, and parliament remains marginal. Conversely, where a class of private wealth accumulators expands, as occurred in Tanzania after the 1980s and in Uganda after the National Resistance Movement took power in 1986, rival factions can more easily form, simultaneously eroding party institutions and encouraging greater legislative strength. Collord uses this analysis to reassess the significance of a stronger legislature She considers its influence on distributive politics both regressive and progressive She also considers its relation to democratization particularly in a context of broader liberalizing reforms The book ultimately encourages a closer examination of how would be democratic institutions interact with an underlying power distribution shaping in whose interests they operate Oxford Studies in African Politics and International Relations is a series for scholars and students working on African politics and International Relations and related disciplines Volumes concentrate on contemporary developments in African political science political economy and International Relations such as electoral politics democratization decentralization gender and political representation the political impact of natural resources the dynamics and consequences of conflict comparative political thought and the nature of the continent's engagement with the East and West Comparative and mixed methods work is particularly encouraged Case studies are welcomed but should demonstrate the broader theoretical and empirical implications of the study and its wider relevance to contemporary debates The focus of the series is on sub Saharan Africa although proposals that explain how the region engages with North Africa and other parts of the world are of interest General Editors Nic Cheeseman Peace Medie and Ricardo Soares de Oliveira

Wiseman, 2021-03-31 By drawing on quantitative data and qualitative analyses of five major national education policies implemented in India over the last 15 years this comprehensive volume explores their impact on teacher quality and perceived effectiveness explaining how this relates to variations in student performance Responding to a national agenda to increase the quality of the Indian teacher workforce Teacher Quality and Education Policy in India critically questions the application of human capital theory to Indian education policy Chapters provide in depth and strategically structured analyses of five national policies including the recently approved National Education Policy NEP 2020 to see how Indian policymakers use teacher quality as a driver and measurement of education and national economic development Ultimately the text offers evidence based policy recommendations to improve teacher quality in India suggesting that while all five policies have contributed significant frameworks and recommendations for teacher quality reform they have failed to move beyond a symbolic function Given its rigorous methodological approach this book will be a valuable addition to the under researched question of education policymaking in postcolonial contexts It will be an indispensable resource not only for scholars working on policymaking in the Indian context but also for those working at the intersection of education teacher development and policymaking in developing countries
