

What Is Professionalism

Professionalism is the way a person acts or conducts themselves in a place of structure, such as a workplace, school, or place of business. Professionalism is not subjected to a specific set of people but is a standard for everyone in an outfitted environment. Professionalism represented by any individual who shows consideration, and respect in the outfitted environment. Individuals should portray traits of professionalism, such as punctuality, trustworthiness, being competent, accountable, and having the ability to carry out tasks in the most respectful manner for anyone involved.

Professionalism to me is how a person in a place of work, structure or place of business conducts themselves. When I think of a professional I think of a person who is the best at whatever job title or description that person carries. That person exemplifies their professionalism with a set of traits that make that person stand out amongst its peers. Examples of those traits are punctuality, trustworthiness, respect, accountability, competency, and self-awareness. I will further those examples below.

Professionalism can be shown in multiple ways. A common trait of professionalism is punctuality. Punctuality is important because it shows that a person is dedicated to being in place and ready to be productive and on time. Punctuality is the ability to be able to complete a task or complete a responsibility at a set time. This, in turn, shows that the individual has respect for the job at hand and the time it takes to complete the job. Punctuality also shows that the person has made a task a priority, and has made the necessary sacrifices to be present and ready to carry out performance duties.

Another form of professionalism is trustworthiness. Trustworthiness is the ability to be relied upon to carry out and perform a task. Being trustworthy shows the that the person is truth-telling and upfront. A trustworthy person is known to be a person that carries out a task without being told, supervised, or reminded. A person of trustworthiness also carries out and acts on responsibilities in an exceptional and satisfying manner to all persons involved.

Respect for others is also a form of professionalism. Showing consideration, demonstrating loyalty, and exceeding expectations demonstrate professionalism. Having a person's respect goes a long way by acquiring high regards from a person and having someone believe that you are worthy of their praise. Respect in professionalism brings a comfort level between all involved and shows that all involved have created a great and functioning environment.

Accountability when something is wrong, and the mindset to take it upon oneself to make the situation better is also a form of professionalism. Being accountable is a major trait of professionalism. One's accountability is welcomed in professionalism for a workplace, school, and in life because it creates a sense of ease and helps promote a safety m
